Alumni Attorney Spotlight - Steven Salky

Steven Salky retired from Zuckerman Spaeder in 2019 to pursue a career in nursing and is attending nursing school. Steve spent 35 years, all as a partner at the firm, where his practice focused on white collar criminal investigations, securities enforcement actions, complex civil litigation, and Congressional investigations. He was sought out by clients for his track record in obtaining winning results, both in and out of the courtroom.

Steve has long maintained an active pro bono practice, including after his departure from the firm. In 2021, he was honored with the Washington Lawyers’ Committee (WLC) Alfred McKenzie Award for his relentless efforts to secure pro bono counsel and train attorneys to represent federal inmates in compassionate release cases under the First Step Act at the height of the COVID-19 pandemic. Since December 2020, Steve has served as Senior Counsel for WLC, where he provides advice and counsel on criminal justice issues.

How did your work at Zuckerman Spaeder prepare you for your current role?

"I had a long, successful career at the firm, where I practiced civil litigation, white collar criminal defense, and did regulatory work. I enjoyed it a lot but was ready to move on to another activity. I decided to go to nursing school as a second career and had to start by completing my prerequisites. My father was a doctor and I have three children in healthcare, and I thought I should work in the healthcare space before it was too late. My experience transitioning to nursing school has confirmed that it really is never too late to learn something new. I am having a great time. What I learned as a lawyer at Zuckerman Spaeder was to think independently, be creative, and not to just do things the way they had always been done. Those skills and that approach have prepared me for my nursing program, which is designed to prepare people to be leaders in the nursing community.

I also keep up to date on legal issues. After leaving Zuckerman Spaeder, I continued my work developing the Compassionate Release Clearinghouse and served as Senior Counsel to the Washington Lawyers' Committee. I continue to practice law and work as Of Counsel at my daughter's firm, Lyons & Salky Law, LLP."

In Memoriam – Rick Massumi, 1954-2022

Rick Massumi was part of the small group of Zuckerman Spaeder lawyers in the early and mid-1980s. Rick was recently diagnosed with cancer, and the story of his life, including his end days, was published in The Washington Post.

Rick was a smart guy with a gift for writing. He left our firm to go to the SEC and then, Sutherland Asbill & Brennan. He remained at Sutherland until his final illness in February 2022.

Above all, Rick was interesting.

Rick's father was the noted Iranian cardiologist Rashid Masumi, whom the Shah invited to return to Iran in the 1970s to modernize cardiology. Rick attended Vassar and earned his law degree from Georgetown. He arrived to DC in an International Harvester truck and lived in it for some time on the streets of Washington.

Rick was always a devotee of music and nightlife. For a time in the 1980s, he dated a waitress at Camelot and practically lived over there when he wasn't in other bars and music venues. At one point, he discovered an old Oklahoma cowboy singer named Brownie Ford. Rick recorded a wonderful album for him, helped him to win a prestigious National Endowment for the Arts National Heritage Fellowship, and arranged a solo concert for him at Carnegie Hall – which proved to be a tour de force for Brownie.

Over the past 30 years, Rick did endless pro bono work to promote nightlife in Adams Morgan and Mount Pleasant in DC, representing bars and music venues in tussles with neighborhood groups who wanted to limit their availability or eliminate them altogether. City Paper described those tussles and Rick's role in them.

As the recent Post article movingly explains, Rick was one of a kind and had a lifetime filled with warm friendships. (Contributed by Michael Smith.)

Case Highlights

Zuckerman Spaeder Launches National Conversation on Race-Norming Following Win in Professional Sports

The American Lawyer’s Litigation Daily: Litigators of the Week: The Zuckerman Spaeder Duo Who Challenged the Use of ‘Race-Norming’ in the NFL Concussion Settlement

"We are elated that the NFL has committed to discontinuing the practice of race-norming and encouraged by the broader impact of this outcome. In recent months, this result and related public discourse have further fueled a movement to reexamine the use of race-based norms throughout health care. We believe that it is vital to a healthy society that we continue to illuminate and dismantle these systemic inequities to ensure fair access to proper care, particularly for Black Americans." – Cy Smith

Zuckerman Spaeder Delivers $10 Million Settlement with UnitedHealth for Underpayment of Mental Health Claims

"For years, United used a Tiered Reimbursement Policy that unfairly reduced benefits when patients obtained psychotherapy from out-of-network behavioral health providers. United has not only eliminated this policy, but as a result of our lawsuit and this settlement, it will now pay $10 million to make up for these underpayments." – Andrew Goldfarb

U.S. Department of Justice and Huawei Technologies Chief Financial Officer have reached a deferred prosecution agreement

"I'm very pleased that Sabrina Meng and the U.S. Department of Justice have reached a deferred prosecution agreement (DPA) and it has been approved by Judge Donnelly. Under the terms of this agreement, Ms. Meng will not be prosecuted further in the U.S. and the extradition proceedings in Canada will be terminated. She has not pleaded guilty and we fully expect the indictment will be dismissed with prejudice after fourteen months. Now, she will be free to return home to be with her family." – William Taylor

Federal Court Rules that UnitedHealth Illegally Denied Autism Treatment for Zuckerman Spaeder Client

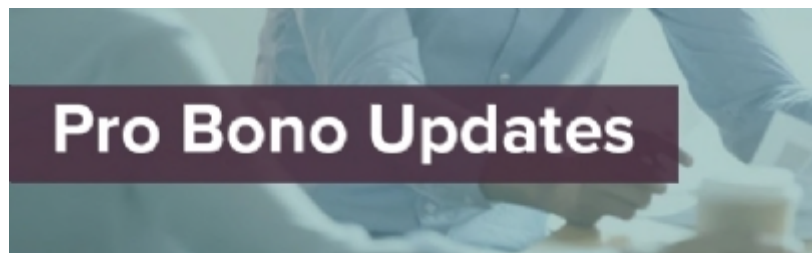

"It is tremendously significant that the Court found this exclusion of coverage to be illegal, and that the nation's largest health insurer can be liable under federal law for enforcing it. Because this exclusion has been in many United-administered plans for years, there are likely to be thousands of other children and families who have been similarly affected. United failed to put the interests of its beneficiaries first when making potentially life-changing coverage decisions." – Caroline Reynolds
